On the first day of the event, the participants were able to learn, enjoy, and take their questions about Migratory Birds. Attendees not familiar with Migratory Birds, Ibaraki Academy shared and elaborated their profound knowledge about Types of Wetlands, Types of Migratory Birds, Threat of Migratory Birds, and The benefits of wetlands by displaying different infographics.

They also tell their experiences about interacting with migratory birds, children enjoyed the pictures of migratory birds that were displayed. We explained to the participants the usage of the Kowa Optronics Spotting Scope by demonstrating and watching the birds that visited the venue at that time. On the second day of the event, we present two topics led by young conservationists from Mindanao State University. The speakers present the topic via PowerPoint presentation through a projector, that the participants will understand and see the slides and data completely.

The first speaker presented "The Climate Crisis on Migratory Birds." participants were eager to learn by engaging in activities, questions, and prizes. The second speaker's topic is "Avian Influenza and the challenges of Avian Species." Participants learned about Avian Influenza and the other viruses that can kill and transmit to another animal. Participants have an idea that perhaps the Migratory Birds are prone to this virus. The speakers were able to deliver their findings to the participants. The speakers share their sources about the topics they were presented for the participants who want to learn more about Migratory birds and their threats. The participants have an increased knowledge and awareness on proper bird identification and monitoring of migratory water- or shorebirds in General Santos City.

The third topic was discussed by Kyle V. Aboy, he highlighted how the East Asian Australasian flyway is an important flyway and Philippines is one of the countries included in this. He has also shared how does light pollution affect migratory birds and shared the work of EAAFP.
